JEWISH APPROACHES TO THE SCIENCE VS. RELIGION DEBATE
by Rabbi Steve Segar

A couple of months ago, just after the fall holidays, I wrote in my monthly column of my intention to use this space to focus on initiatives, both within and beyond the Jewish community, that seek to deepen and broaden the contemporary dialogue between science and religion. I made particular mention in that column of a new organization called, “Sinai and Synapses” that is being developed within the National Jewish Center for

PARTICIPATE IN NEW COMMUNAL SHABBAT PRACTICES GROUP

Every Shabbat we have the opportunity to gather together as a community. We pray, sing, eat, and talk. Why does our tradition offer us this communal spiritual gathering every Shabbat? Why do Kol Halev members value this time together, whether they attend weekly or just occasionally? How do we use this time to enhance the Shabbat experience of our membership?

The Religious Practices Committee would like to consider these questions and create some principals to guide our communal Shabbat practices. We are inviting members to join as we explore, study, and reflect on our shared Shabbat experience.

If you are interested in participating in this group, or if you have questions about it, please contact Connie Friedman at conniesfriedman@gmail.com. We’re looking for 12-15 people to begin meeting in February and attend 6-8 meetings over the course of the year.

FALL FUNDRAISER GOOD NEWS!
by Mattuck Meacham
Vice President and Values Team Leader

We have wonderful news to share about our Fall Fundraiser: A generous group of anonymous member families have offered to match campaign donations dollar for dollar, up to a total of $16,000! This means that every dollar you donate will result in two dollars for Kol HaLev.

If you have already made a pledge or payment, thank you very much! If you have not yet made your pledge or payment, please do so today. As you know, providing for Kol HaLev’s well-being is a group effort. Each of us is asked to contribute according to our abilities. Any size contribution from the heart is meaningful, and every contribution is helpful. Please pledge by January 31.

Thank you very much for your time, generosity and commitment to our community. May Kol HaLev continue to be one of the inspiring lights in your life.

Learning and Leadership. The first major project they have launched is entitled, “Scientists in Synagogues,” and it involves selecting synagogues across the religious spectrum with members who are engaged in professional scientific pursuits. The synagogues that are chosen are then supplied with the financial and scholarly resources to develop programming focused on the science and religion conversation. Their members who are scientists will be given opportunities both to help develop and implement these programs in their own synagogues and also to explore their own understandings of this conversation with other Jewish scientists from around the country.

On the Sinai and Synapses website, there is a very interesting justification for the importance of this kind of initiative within the Jewish community that is grounded in research on attitudes towards science across a range of religious identities. Here is an excerpt from that research:

A common refrain in liberal Jewish circles is, "I don’t believe in God. I believe in science and in nature." And in the national survey fielded by Rice University and American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) as part of the “Perceptions Project,” data showed just how prevalent that perspective is.

When the Perceptions Project asked people how they perceived the relationship between science and religion, several potential responses were offered. One was ‘in collaboration,’ one was ‘independent,’ and two were ‘in conflict’—one ‘on the side of religion’ and the other ‘on the side of science’

About 25% of the American populace chose one of the two conflict options, which, interestingly, was the same percentage as the Jewish population. But while most of the Christians who saw religion and science in opposition viewed themselves as on the side of religion, those Jews who saw science and religion in conflict came down on the side of science — and by a huge margin. For the “conflicted Christians,” three out of four opted for religion, and one out of four chose science. But for the 25% of conflicted Jews, 15 out of 16 saw themselves on the side of science, and therefore, anti-religion.

This finding clearly implies that it’s often less of a challenge to get Jews to embrace science than it is to get them to embrace Judaism. Perhaps because Judaism has long embraced questioning and challenging authority, or perhaps because theology is rarely emphasized in the more liberal branches of Judaism, many Jews erroneously think that if they accept science, then they need to reject their Judaism. Thus one goal of Scientists in Synagogues will be to show that science and Judaism need not be in conflict, and that Jews do not need to reject their Judaism in order to celebrate science.

In some ways, I think this dynamic is less pronounced in the Reconstructionist movement, due to Mordecai Kaplan’s emphasis on the importance of scientific discovery to religious self-understanding. Our enthusiastic embrace the annual observance of “Evolution Shabbat” is one clear signal that we are in accord with that Kaplanian approach. However, even for us, I sense that there is less appreciation than there might be for the dynamism and ongoing evolution of this conversation. It is my hope that we will build on our yearly exploration of these questions and find even more ways to engage with each other and explore this fascinating and challenging arena of inquiry with more frequency going forward.

NEXT UP: INFORMAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS FROM BIBLE RAP & CAMP JRF

Informal Jewish education is rooted in a belief that the experience is central to the individual's Jewish development. The notion of experience in education derives from the idea that participating in an event or a moment through the senses and the body enables one to understand a concept, fact or belief in a direct and unmediated way. Experience in education refers to learning that happens through participation in events or through other direct action, or by direct observation or hearing. John Dewey expanded upon this idea by suggesting that people are active centers of impulse rather than passive vessels and they learn best when they are actively rather than passively engaged in experiencing an idea or an event. Such experiencing is rooted in the interaction of the idea or event with the person’s life and with a continuum of ideas that enables the experience to contribute to ongoing personal growth. The focus on experience results in a pedagogy that attempts to create settings which enable values to be experienced personally and events to be experienced in real time and in genuine venues, rather than their being described to the learner. Over the years this notion of experiencing has become closely identified with “experiential education,” often seen as the “calling card” of informal education.

– Barry Chazan, The Philosophy of Informal Jewish Education

When I was first approached about working for Kol HaLev, I was most excited about the fact that Hagiga is an informal educational program. As a product of a youth movement, sleepaway camp, and teen Israel experience, I've experienced first-hand the power of informal Jewish education and its long-lasting effects of my life. In the position of Education Director at Kol HaLev, I try to develop informal educational experiences that will have impact on on students' characters. Whether students are learning to respectfully disagree, recognizing that there are multiple avenues for looking at questions, searching for ethical responses to situations that arise or seeing the beauty in diversity, the Hagiga program is designed to provide opportunities to learn life lessons through meaningful exchanges.

In this vein, we will have two special guests coming to Hagiga this month. On January 7, Matt Bar of Bible Raps will meet with the Magshimim (grades 6-8) and Chalutzim (high school) classes to demonstrate his unique approach to studying Torah. Matt is an internationally renown Torah scholar who teaches through hip hop, and characterizes his instruction as “Hamilton for the Jews” because his work is infused with Jewish history. Matt will also explain how to rap and support participants in writing their own Torah raps. It should be an incredibly fun, creative and interesting learning opportunity. Matt will also be leading an intergenerational lunch and learn following services. (For more information, see the flyer on page 9). These programs are generously sponsored through @Akiva Artist in Residence Program and the Congregational Enrichment Fund of the Jewish Education Center of Cleveland.

Our second guest is Sheira Director-Nowak, who is the assistant director of Camp JRF, the Reconstructionist Movement’s sleepaway camp. She will be joining us on January 21 to lead programs for all ages which will encompass multiple elements of camp – fun, social, educational, community and Reconstructionism. Sheira will be available during Kiddush to talk about Camp JRF and answer any questions you may have. Campers and camp alumni will also be available to share about their experiences. It should be a very fun day!

Looking forward to sharing these informal educational experiences with you!

Robyn
We send wishes for a refuah shleimah, a complete and speedy healing, to Abe Chasin, Anita Cohn, Selma Gwatkin, Ron Kohn, Bellamy Printz and Celia and John Lewis, Pauline Raymond, David Steinweg and Eda Weiss. We would love to hear from you if you or another Kol HaLev member you know of would like to be included on this list.

Thanks to Andy Getz, the Hesed Monthly Co-ordinator for December. During the month, members provided meals and rides, made visits, and sent cards.

It is only a true and close community that develops associations, traditions and memories that go to make up its soul. To mingle one’s personality with that soul becomes a natural longing. In such a community one experiences that mystic divine grace which, like radiant sunshine, illumines our lives when joyous and, like balm, heals them when wounded or stricken.

~Mordecai Kaplan

Please join us for our annual Hesed Service

Saturday, January 21, 2017

If you wish to participate in the work of the Hesed Committee, or if you know of anyone who may need the support of our committee, please contact Rabbi Steve or Robin Holzman (robinholzman@gmail.com) and Martha Schubert (marthaschubert@mac.com), Hesed Co-chairs.
The Kol HaLev board met December 12 at the home of David Conn and engaged in significant conversation around several issues affecting the community.

The first focused on procedures and policies around membership and dues commitments. Treasurer David Conn reported that we have either financial or signed membership commitments from 102 of the 137 families on currently on our membership list. Our commitment support volunteer, Maxine Collin, continues to follow up with those who have made no commitment, and the number of members who commit continues to grow.

However, there was discussion about whether there should be some criteria around when or whether we take families who have made no commitment to membership off the list. It was re-iterated that no one would be denied membership because of inability to pay, but that we needed an accurate count of members for both programming and financial planning. Several people felt that our somewhat looser policy towards commitment allows people to get to know the community before officially joining.

No decision was reached, but it was agreed that discussion will continue, and that members who have made neither a financial commitment nor signed the membership commitment form are encouraged to do so as soon as possible.

Following a report from Education Director Robyn Novick, who indicated that she was having difficulty finding volunteers willing to help with the high school youth group and other educational activities, the board began a general discussion about how to encourage volunteerism and engagement among members.

It is expected that the report of the Leadership Taskforce, when completed in early 2017, will include recommendations, based on input from members, to address this. Board members also talked about the need for one-on-one conversations with members to better understand their needs and concerns.

The next meeting of the Kol HaLev Board will be Monday, January 9 at 7:30 at the home of Deena Epstein. All members are welcome to attend.

JOIN OUR LIST OF MEMBERS WHO HOST SERVICES

Several times each year, when the Ratner School is unavailable, Kol HaLev holds services in members’ homes. By offering their homes for services, our member-hosts make possible a nearly uninterrupted calendar of services.

The Religious Practices Committee (RPC) would like to expand the list of member-hosts, members who may be willing to host as timing and circumstances allow. The demands upon a host are small; the rewards to the community are large. And one is under no obligation to say “yes” to any particular date.

If you would be willing to be asked as need arises, please let RPC chairperson Bruce Fallick know at brucefallick@gmail.com.
